They say change is the only constant; we say that change is what makes the hotel industry ever so exciting!

The design of hotel rooms is one of the quickest changing fields in the hospitality sector. Whether it's an interior with a mellow ambience or one with an explosion of colours, our years of experience tells us that there is a growing demand for innovative ideas in this field.

It's no wonder then that when we talk to hotel owners, their grievances about designing hotel rooms sound something like these:

• I have a budget in mind, but what can I get for this? How many choices are there?
• Wish someone could show me my available options RIGHT NOW.
• I don't want to have to pay my architect each time I change a design I don't like.
• This iterative process is going to take months! I won't be able to open my hotel in time.
• I want to box up my risk. I don't want my costs to balloon out for whatever reason.
• Gee - I don't want to have to choose the supplier. How will I know which supplier is reliable?
• I wonder how many mark-ups I have to pay. How many middlemen are there?
• Have these guys done it before? What happens if something goes wrong? Can I reach them overseas?

We've heard you. So we started rethinking the process of designing a hotel room, and developed a brand new concept called Hotel In A Box.

Let us tell you more.

Now, what can we do for your hotel?
Embracing the popular term “less is always more”, Dwell takes on a minimalistic approach on its interior design. The zen feeling is achieved by using neutral colours and having less intricacies in the room’s design – little to no patterns and a consistent tone overall.
